Natural Color Coffe, Since the Covid-19 pandemic swept the world, I've dedicated my time to tending to my coffee garden. I pruned all the local coffee trees to a height of 120 cm. As new shoots emerged on the parent trees, I grafted them with robusta coffee scions. This experiment yielded lush growth, vibrant flowering, and an abundance of fruit. The ripe, red coffee cherries were boiled, and the juice extracted from their skins was repurposed for painting. The creation of Primitive Face 2 unfolded spontaneously, with bold strokes of a palette knife combined with absorbing the coffee skin hues with a damp cloth, ultimately achieving a harmonious balance of lines, colors, space, and textures. Primitive Faces 1 & 2, Since the Covid-19 pandemic hit the world, I've been spending my time tending to my coffee garden. I pruned all the local coffee trees to a height of 120 cm. After new shoots grew on the parent trees, I grafted them with robusta coffee cuttings. This experiment resulted in lush growth, flowering, and abundant fruiting. The red coffee cherries are picked, boiled, and squeezed, and the extracted liquid is used to paint on canvas. The manifestation of primitive faces is an obsession that often emerges in my mind. The color of the coffee skin draws my attention, and I apply it repeatedly with varied brushstrokes. The creation of "Primitive Faces 1 & 2" involves spontaneous strokes with a palette knife, combined with absorbing the coffee skin colors with a damp cloth to achieve a harmonious blend of colors, lines, spaces, and textures.
